FUEL ALLOCATION EQUITY AMENDMENT WILL BE CONTAINED IN LEGISLATION

WASHINGTON, D.C.--Senator Bob Dole said today that House conferees meeting on the Daylight Savings Bill had assured Senate members of the conference that Dole's fuel allocation equity amendment would be contained in legislation to be passed by the House before the end of the year.

Dole's amendment would prohibit any "unreasonable discrimination" in the allocation of fuel under federal allocation programs. Dole said he had been assured Monday afternoon, by Senator Warren Magnuson (D-Wash) and Senator Norris Cotton (R-N.H.) the senior senator on the Conference committee that "the fuel allocation equity matter would be resolved -- and the thrust of his amendment passed into law -- by the time Congress adjourns this year.

House conferees were prevented from accepting Dole's amendment as a part of the Daylight Savings Bill because of a difference between House and Senate parliamentary procedures regarding such amendments. They did assure the Senate conferees that language similar to Dole's amendment would be added to legislation now pending in the House.

Dole said that "there was no urgency to obtaining passage of his amendment because action by the President to modify allocations for general aviation had solved the immediate problem which had initially prompted interest in such an amendment. Final passage of the amendment," Dole added, "will put the Congress on record as to the importance of equity in fuel allocations."
