RE: REMARKS TO WASHINGTON CENTER COLLEGE STUDENTS
MARCH 20
8:30 A.M.

*The Washington Center is in its 16th year of offering academic courses and internship programs to college students.

*You will be meeting with approximately 40 college students who have been working in Washington for a couple of months as interns at various business and government offices.

*The breakfast is sponsored by Phillip Morris Company.

*My contact at the Center says these are bright and highly motivated students who like to ask questions. Their preferred format is for you to speak briefly about the issues of the day, and then to move to questions and answers.

*You might want to begin with your usual material on the Gulf and the chance to move forward with the domestic agenda, and then move to Q&A.

8:30 - 9:30 a.m.

Dear Senator Dole:

I am writing to ask you to speak this spring to a group of The Washington Center's college student interns as part of our Philip Morris Capitol Hill Breakfast Series. These forums provide students with an opportunity to learn about a broad range of social, economic and political issues directly from experts in policy development and advocacy. I am certain our students would be eager to hear from you.

This spring we are focusing on the broad theme, "International". In keeping with this theme, we are asking speakers to present their views on vital topics such as U.S. competitiveness, international trade, and refugees and immigration issues.

As you are probably aware, The Washington Center has been providing internship and seminars programming for over 15 years to undergraduate and graduate students enrolled in over 700 schools across the country. Over 15,000 students have taken advantage of our program, serving full-time internships in federal agencies, congressional offices, private sector firms and businesses, and nonprofit organization. Enclosed are some materials for your review.

The Philip Morris Capitol Hill Breakfast Series is held in Room S-120 of the US Capitol building between 8:30 a.m. and 9:30 a.m. Approximately 40 students attend each breakfast. Enclosed is a listing of available dates for these programs. Please review it and inform us of your availability at your earliest convenience.

Thank you for your consideration of this invitation, and I look forward to your early response.

Sincerely,

WMB
