MEMORANDUM
MAY 6, 1993

TO: SENATOR DOLE
FROM: MIRA BARATTA
SUBJECT: BOSNIAN SERB REJECTION OF PEACE PLAN

The Bosnian Serb "parliament" rejected the Vance/Owen peace plan and called instead for a referendum of Bosnian Serbs. This is a summary of what President Clinton said at around 11:00 a.m. in response to this development:

- progress toward peace unfortunately stopped;
- rejection a "great disappointment";
- proposed Bosnian Serb referendum is a "delaying tactic to further consolidate their gains" (White House also said earlier that this referendum is illegitimate since it would have a minority decide the future of the majority of Bosnian citizens);
- sooner or later a durable peace will have to be reached that is acceptable to all parties;
- the international community can't allow the Serbs to stall movement toward peace;
- the United States and the international community has fundamental interests in this situation:

- (1) Serb actions violates the principle of internationally recognized borders;

- (2) this conflict could widen in ways that would be damaging;

- (3) ethnic cleansing offends the world's conscience.
- Secretary Christopher has been directed to continue consultations on tougher measures that can be taken collectively.
- the international community must unite to act quickly and decisively -- Europe must be willing to act -- to "confine savage acts and to confine the ability of one country to invade another and change the borders."

The Bosnian Serb's rejected the plan despite significant last minute concessions made by Vance and Owen in Athens. One of these concessions is particularly troubling: after months of negotiations on the boundaries for the 10 provinces, Owen indicated in Athens that there is "considerable flexibility in the defining of provincial boundaries." In his "clarification statement" Owen said that towns and villages could appeal to a Boundary Commission to be included in another province. What this means is that boundary questions could be reopened while peace is being established and while arrangements are being codified in the drafting of a constitution! Since the central government is extremely weak under the interim arrangements provisions and the provinces quite autonomous, this type of "flexibility" could really hamper the functioning of governmental structures at all levels if provincial jurisdictions are challenged by individual towns and villages. Moreover, this reinterpretation of the interim arrangements by Vance and Owen is probably not shared by the other two signatories, President Izetbegovic and Mate Boban, the Bosnian Croat leader.
